Blackhawks reign even without field of dreams

North Philly. Players from the the 2010 championship team: It's nice, but it "Wouldn't have made a difference."

Three members of the North Philly Blackhawks 2010 Pop Warner national football championship team stood in their black- and gold-lettered jackets Monday on a green field with clear lines of white.

Four years ago these three young men — Keith Moorison, Qashah Carter, and Najee Richburg — were bashing and thrashing on a brown field spotted with patches of green.

Carter, 16, gazed across the artificial playing surface illuminated by stadium lighting, considering a question: If they played here while fighting for the championship, would it have helped their chances?

"It would have been nice," said Carter, "but it wouldn't have made a difference."

The field at 11th and Cecil B. Moore in the heart of North Philadelphia and Temple University's campus unveiled $2.5 million renovation Monday afternoon, the first in the team's 45-year history.

The brown-stained grass field was replaced with artificial turf. New field goal posts and a scoreboard were installed, along with new paving, fencing and landscaping. The baseball field in the southeast corner was also renovated, along with the restrooms and locker rooms.

If the Blackhawks won without the new digs, what will they do with them? Coach Keon Savoy knows: "Now we don't have to cancel practice because of the rain," he said, "it's going to be a machine."

The fields will be shared between the Blackhawks and St. Joe's Prep High School athletic teams, which contributed money along with the City of Philadelphia, Philadelphia Local Initiatives Support Corporation and the Philadelphia Eagles. Temple University offered a small donation, but it was not accepted, an official said.

But despite the new digs, the three players said it can't change the desire to win, but maybe it can instill a sense of pride.

"They can learn to appreciate something and feel pride," said Moorison, 17, "seeing that team name on the field and coming from playing on dirt piles to a turf field."

"It will motivate them," Carter added, "because they can see what happens when you really work for something."

Manayunk. No sign of student missing since Thanksgiving

Despite an outpouring of volunteer support and the participation of the FBI, no progress has been made in the search for Shane Montgomery, the 21-year old Roxborough native and West Chester University student, last seen leaving Kildare's Irish Pub at 2 a.m. on Thanksgiving Day.

Lie detector tests have been administered to people who last saw Montgomery and surveillance footage is being investigated, reports say.

A reward of $25,000 is being offered for the discovery of Montgomery after Kildare's kicked in an extra $10,000.

Cosby out at Temple

Comedian Bill Cosby resigned Monday from the Temple University Board of Directors amid allegations of sexual abuse leveled against the Philadelphia native by women he had worked with.

"I have always wanted to do what would be in the best interests of the university and its students," Cosby, 77, said in a statement. "As a result, I have tendered my resignation from the Temple University Board of Trustees."

The board of trustees accepted the resignation and "thanks him for his service to the university," according to the statement.

Cosby sat on the board for 32 years. METRO

Healthy PA goes into effect, but how long will it last?

Pennsylvania. Some 600,000 residents are eligible for health care under a new state program.

Penny Johnson has health issues. Many health issues. And until today she had no way to pay for them.

"I got a lot of medical care. I'm sick. I have lupus. I have blood clots. Right now I need bloodwork done and I can't pay to get it done," the 54-year old North Philly resident said Monday.

Johnson became one of the first Pennsylvanians to sign up for health insurance through Healthy PA, a Medicaid-like program that went into effect Monday and expanded eligibility for subsidized insurance to 600,000 Pennsylvanians.

"I got a lot of medical care. I'm sick. ... I need bloodwork done and I can't pay to get it done."
Johnson

Her monthly bill for copayments on medicines to treat the lupus costs $500. "I can't afford this by myself," she said at Quality Community Health Care at 25th and Lehigh Avenue.

Johnson was told her Medicaid assistance would be terminated Monday, adding to pressure to find a solution. "I haven't really been sleeping good because I'm stressing. Now I can take care of myself," she said.

Some health care advocates have doubts about Healthy PA, which Gov.-elect Tom Wolf, who takes office Jan. 20, did not support and may dismantle.

"We are happy that folks are getting coverage. Is Healthy PA the ideal plan that we want to see? No," said Antoinette Kraus, director of the Pennsylvania Health Access Network.

"It's a very limited package. ... You're creating a whole other system that's separate from Medicaid and the [Obamacare] marketplace," Kraus said. "We're going to continue to advocate to the Wolf administration to fix the problems."

Changing health care

Will Healthy PA last?

Healthy PA was designed by by Gov. Tom Corbett as an alternative to a straight expansion of Medicaid under Obamacare.

Individuals with an income between 100 and 138 percent of the federal poverty level are eligible to sign up for subsidized insurance programs offered by private companies.

Pennsylvania has a health care marketplace as part of the Affordable Care Act. Aides to incoming Gov. Tom Wolf said that even if the Democrat discontinues Healthy PA, enrollees wan't have their health care disrupted.

SEPTEMBER SAFETY TIPS:

The back-to-school season is a time that can be stressful for both parents and students. Aside from the obvious, back to school comes with new traffic patterns and added hazards to the roadways.

Here are some tips to remember:

- Exercise extra caution as sun glare can be a factor during these times
- Come to a complete stop at a safe distance from a bus when the red lights are flashing and the stop sign arm is extended - this indicates the bus is stopped and children are getting off the bus
- Never pass a stopped school bus - it is illegal in all 50 states

McCain to Philly: War-weary U.S. must press on Politics. John McCain took questions on war and politics at the Union League on Monday.

Obama White House

McCain was asked what Obama has done well during his Presidency.

- "I believe he has selected some good people in positions of authority, for example our leaders in Iraq and Afghanistan."
- "I think he has worked hard on some issues such as free trade."

John McCain says America needs another Harry Truman.

Truman's courageous efforts to keep the U.S. military involved in the Korean War, even as the overwhelming majority of Americans wanted to pull soldiers out of the conflict let the military reach a cease-fire, he said.

"Now today, Americans don't want to be involved with things that are going on over in Iraq and Afghanistan, or most of the other places in the world," said McCain, the Republican senator from Arizona and former presidential candidate said Monday at a meeting of the World Affairs Council of Philadelphia at the Union League club.

"We need a Harry Truman, not that's going to start a war, but we need a Harry Truman who is steadfast in principles and belief in America's indispensable role in the world," said McCain.

"Yes, we are war weary," said McCain, a former Navy aviator who spent five and a half years in a North Vietnamese prison after he was shot down on a combat mission. "We were war weary after World War II ... but we're going to be a lot more war weary if we allow ISIS to expand and continue to succeed. And believe me, they are succeeding."

Quoted

"When Americans watch other Americans being beheaded in the most gruesome fashion on the Internet it has affected American public opinion and brought home to them the threat that ISIS and radical Islam poses to the security of the country."

McCain

McCain gave attendees his thoughts on Barack Obama's presidency, Russia's leadership and how to contain the Islamic State, also known as ISIS.

How best to combat the growing threat of Islamic terrorism should be a key topic in the 2016 presidential race.

"I'm almost sorry I'm not running again," said McCain, 79, "and that's the only reason."

Turning to Russia's autocratic leader, Vladimir Putin, McCain said "he will go as far as he can get away with," McCain said. "Vladimir Putin is an old KGB agent that is now trying to restore the Russian Empire. That's what he says."

McCain also paid homage to the late Sen. Arlen Specter, a Pennsylvania Democrat who died in 2012, as a colorful, magnetic, entertaining and thoughtful.

"An individual that I enjoyed enormously serving with," he said. "People come and go in the United States Senate, but Arlen left his imprint."

PATCO revises schedule

PATCO trains will run less frequently every week between Thursday afternoons and Monday mornings, beginning Dec. 4 at 10 a.m.

Trains will run on a single track as crews replace electrical cables, creating delays of 12-16 minutes.

Trains are still slated to run every 15 minutes in both directions from Monday morning through rush hour Thursday morning.

Philadelphia groups ask for support on 'Giving Tuesday'

Good deeds. After Black Friday and Cyber Monday comes Giving Tuesday — but does it work?

The Philadelphia staff of Habitat for Humanity poses for a photo for Giving Tuesday outside of a house that the non-profit helped to build. / CHARLES MOSTOLLER

After the post-Thanksgiving shopping rush, nonprofits and charitable groups will be asking people to focus on supporting charitable causes.

"With everything that happens between Black Friday and Cyber Monday, we spend a lot of time fixated on ourselves. Giving Tuesday is a great way to refocus our energy where it really should be, which is helping out other people," said Chris Bernholdt, co-organizer of the Philly Dads Meetup.

The Philly Dads will be marking Giving Tuesday by shopping at Target in King of Prussia for children in need of clothes, school supplies and toys, Bernholdt said. The goods will be delivered through the nonprofit Cradles to Crayons.

Many groups around Philadelphia are seeking donations to help fund their work.

Habitat for Humanity Philadelphia has donors that will match up to $15,000 in donations on Giving Tuesday — enough funds to complete a house in South Philadelphia so a family can move in by the holidays, the group says.

The Pennsylvania Horticultural Society (PHS) is seeking donations, and votes from the public on where their next pop-up garden should be.

"Especially for this generation, they don't just want to push a button and donate money — they want to be involved in the causes they contribute to," said PHS spokesman Alan Jaffe.

Do people give?

Fewer Philly groups are involved in "Giving Tuesday" this year.

"I think it's a really interesting idea, but I would be interested to see how successful it is over the next couple of years," said Temple University law and tax professor Kathy Mandelbaum, an expert in charitable giving.

While it's a good cause, the holiday season is already crowded, she said.

"Even if all it does is accelerate end-of-the-year giving, that's a good a thing," Mandelbaum said. "This is getting people to focus on charities four weeks earlier."

Weak data. Global stocks fall, yen and oil recover from lows

Global stock markets fell on Monday as slowing factory activity in China and Europe added to worries about weaker global growth. Apple shares dropped, while the yen briefly hit a seven-year low after Moody's cut its rating on Japan.

Oil prices rebounded after hitting five-year lows, lifted by data suggesting that tumbling prices may have started affecting drilling activity in the fast-growing U.S. shale oil industry.

The day's data added to investor caution. Chinese purchasing managers data showed manufacturing slowed in November, suggesting the world's second biggest economy was continuing to lose momentum. Factory activity also slowed in France and Germany.

"The places where we are seeing strength are in the more defensive areas of the (stock) market. That's tied to the perceived weakness in global growth," said Kevin Caron, market strategist at Stifel, Nicolaus & Co in Florham Park, New Jersey. REUTERS

On Wall Street, Apple shares dropped 2.7 percent and the stock was the most actively traded on Nasdaq. The cause of the decline was not yet clear. Shares of U.S. retailers declined after Thanksgiving weekend in-store sales failed to impress.

Obama requests $263M for Ferguson response

Obama has said he sympathized with people upset by the decision. / GETTY IMAGES

President Barack Obama asked Congress on Monday for $263 million for the federal response to the civil rights upheaval in Ferguson, Missouri, and is setting up a task force to study how to improve modern-day policing.

The funds would pay for body cameras for police officers to use and expand training for law enforcement in an attempt to build trust in communities such as Ferguson, where a grand jury decided not to indict a white police officer in the August shooting death of an unarmed black teenager, the White House said.

Philadelphia police commissioner Charles Ramsey and Laurie Robinson, a George Mason University professor who is a former assistant attorney general, will lead the task force on 21st-century policing, officials said.

Also on Monday, the White House released the results of a months-long review into whether community police need some of the military-style weaponry and hardware sent to police departments since the 9/11 attacks.

"We've found that in many cases, these programs actually serve a very useful purpose. What is needed, however, is much greater consistency in oversight of these programs," said White House spokesman Josh Earnest. REUTERS

Deadline

120

The review found a lack of consistency in how federal programs provide military-style equipment. As a result, Obama ordered his staff to develop recommendations within 120 days on how to provide greater oversight, such as requiring local civilian approval of such acquisitions.

Report: US military warned of possible ISIL attacks at home

FBI. A spokesman confirmed the accuracy of the ABC report, but declined to provide a copy of the memo.

A U.S. government source told Reuters the warning most likely was issued in response to an upsurge in social media postings by suspected militants threatening U.S. service members. / GETTY IMAGES

U.S. officials have warned military personnel that Islamic State forces may be planning attacks against them in the United States, ABC News reported on Monday.

A joint intelligence bulletin sent to law enforcement agencies by the FBI and the Department of Homeland Security urged members of the military to erase from their online social media accounts anything that would draw attention from "violent extremists," or reveal service members' identity, the news network said.

ABC said the government indicated late Sunday it had obtained intelligence that Islamic State militants, who have taken over parts of Iraq and Syria with the intention of setting up a fundamentalist caliphate, were targeting the United States within its borders.

"The FBI recently received reporting indicating individuals overseas are spotting and assessing like-minded individuals who are willing and capable of conducting attacks against current and former U.S.-based members of the United States military," the bulletin said, according to a Reuters source.

OMG! Gas masks with some 'sole': California artist makes gas masks out of sneakers

This artist really knows how to "mask" the smell of sneakers.

California-based artist Gary Lockwood, aka Freehand Profit, turns kicks into gas masks as a part of a project called "Sneakerhead." The 31-year-old explains why "duality" is at the heart of his "sole" style.

One of Lockwood's masks made from sneakers /FREEHANDPROFIT.COM

What's your method in mask-making?

Each mask I create is one-of-a-kind. I'll never use the same shoe twice (a different color of that shoe maybe, but always constructed in a new way). They all start seemingly the same with the destruction of a coveted pair of sneakers. Then over the course of six weeks to six months, depending on the mask, I piece together the puzzle — backward.

Why did you start making them in the first place?

I've been a lifelong artist and hip-hop head. In 2010, I started a year-long, daily creative project called "MASK365." For it I created, drew and painted a mask every day and published it through my blog. During the project I pushed myself out of my own creative comfort zones and craved new materials to work with. I made a gas mask like the ones you see today — except with a handbag that had been thrown out. I don't know much about handbags, but I was happy with the new piece and saw a lot of potential in the new artistic process.

What do the masks represent?

They're intended as works of art: sculptures that are individual art pieces but also a bigger part of my art through photography. Sneakers have always been a staple of hip-hop culture, and as such they became a part of my life. The gas mask comes in to play partially because I started writing graffiti in school. Graffiti writers will wear respirators to protect their lungs — and mask their identity. In the bigger picture of what the art is, the gas mask symbolizes the world at war, biological contagion and civil unrest. DMITRY BELYAEV, METRO WORLD NEWS

'Air' on the side of caution

UK concerned by Russia's testing of its air space

Britain said on Monday it was concerned by a sharp increase in Russian military flights close to its borders that it said were designed to test its air defenses.

"It is entirely appropriate for NATO countries in particular to work together to respond to what is a change of Russia's dealings with NATO and indeed the non-NATO European countries," British Foreign Secretary Philip Hammond told a committee of lawmakers.

Interceptions of Russian military aircraft by the military alliance's planes have increased since Moscow annexed Ukraine's Crimea region in March, in particular over the Baltic region.

Last month, Britain's Royal Air Force intercepted Russian military aircraft flying close to British air space at least twice, an occurrence which routinely triggers the scrambling of fighter jets to escort them away.

Earlier this year, Hammond, then defense secretary, said Britain had observed a resurgence in Russian air activity in recent years because of a Kremlin military overhaul. REUTERS

Art students use iPads to hone their craft

PROFESSOR LYNN PALEWICZ HAS USED IPADS IN HER CLASSES SINCE 2012. / PROVIDED

Creativity. Digital tools find a place in traditional fine art classes.

Like students at most art schools, the young women who attend the Moore College of Art in Center City spend their first year on campus diving into the basics of art — learning the foundations of drawing, painting and sculpture.

But along with the pencils, brushes and crayons you'd expect to be in a young artist's tool kit, Moore students also rely on something much more high-tech: their iPads.

Since 2012, Moore has given every first-year student a new Apple device once they arrive on campus. Administrators say they decided to implement the program because they wanted to integrate the digital aspects of the curriculum with the more traditional parts of the program.

"One of the main ways the students use their iPads is as a multimedia sketchbook," says professor Lynn Palewicz, who teaches the foundation of art class all students are required to take. "It's a wonderful container for ideas and allows for experimenting and exploring."

Digital natives

While the first generation of digital natives are now in college, many Moore students, such as Ava Mallett hadn't thought to incorporate digital media into their work before they started classes. "I actually didn't know that was a thing," says Mallet, a sophomore fine arts major who grew up in Texas.

Mallett says the tablet is particularly useful while experimenting with new ideas she's not completely sure of. "Sometimes I will choose a different route with hash marks and colors. Doing that on a physical object is permanent," she notes, adding that having the option of trying things out has given her greater flexibility.

"I like having the iPad because I can have my notes when I prepare my ideas," says student Emily Eggly. "I can use it for things like color testing. And I've been using it to just get information also."

The learning curve

Some students were hesitant to embrace using their iPads in class alongside other tools. Mallett admits that she was one of them. "At first I thought, 'I'm just going to use it to take notes,'" she says. "But now I use it often."

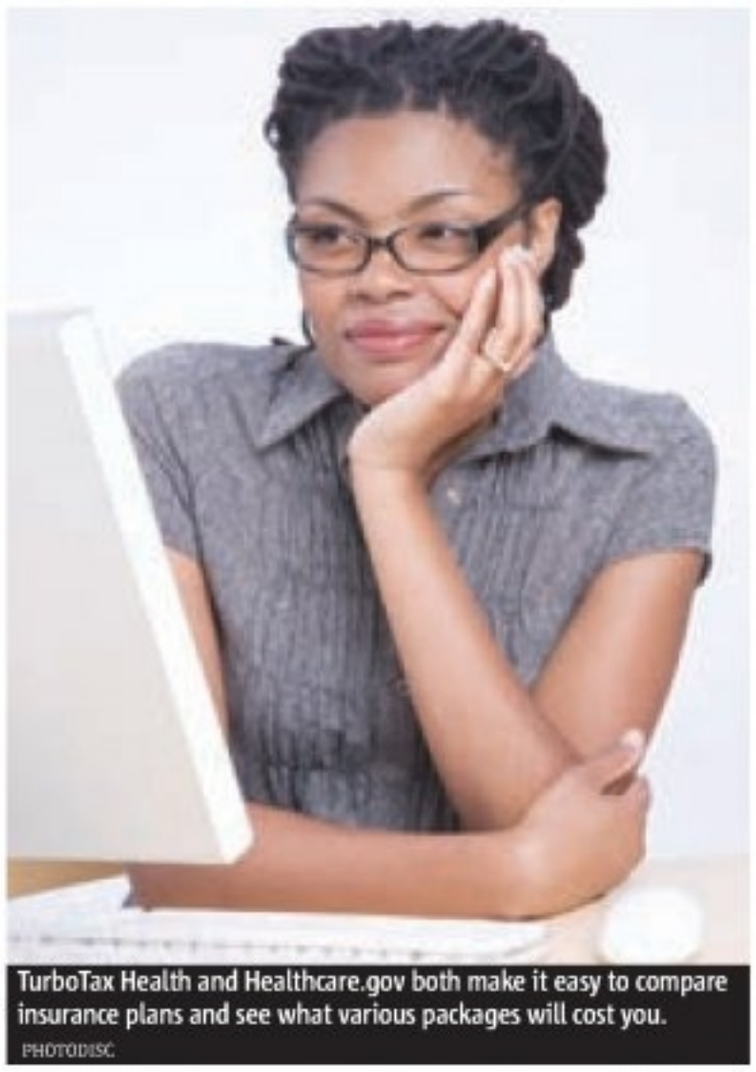
How mandatory health coverage will affect your taxes

Act now. TurboTax Health offers tools to help you understand what you need to know.



TurboTax Health and Healthcare.gov both make it easy to compare insurance plans and see what various packages will cost you.
PHOTODISC

This tax season brings about an unprecedented change: The next time you file your taxes, you'll be fined if you don't have health coverage. If you're still uninsured, now is the time to pay attention. Open enrollment for the Affordable Care Act is taking place now; enroll before Feb. 15 to avoid fines on your 2015 tax return.

"For those who didn't have coverage in 2014, the penalty will be 1 percent of their taxable income or $95, whatever is higher," says Lisa Zamosky, a health care correspondent and TurboTax blog contributor. That might not sound like much, but the penalty will continue to increase each year. "For 2015, the penalty will be 2 percent of your income or $325, whichever is higher, and for 2016 it will be even more," she says.

Because choosing a health care plan can be daunting, TurboTax recently launched its new TurboTax Health feature to help people compare different plans and calculate how they would affect them come tax time — all for free. If you're insured, whether it's through your workplace, on your own or through Medicaid, TurboTax Health walks you through what to expect when filing your taxes.

If you currently have coverage, keep an eye out for a form heading your way in January, around the time you will also receive your W-2s. The form will provide vital information you'll need when filing your taxes. Those who were covered through the Affordable Care Act in 2014 will receive two forms: one showing the received financial help and one proving the coverage.

If you don't currently have health coverage, it's important to start comparing your options now to avoid being fined when you file your 2015 taxes. TurboTax Health helps you weigh your options by asking you simple questions about yourself. It will tell you how much the policies available to you will cost per month and also help you find a personalized plan to fit your needs.

Zamosky also stresses that for people still feeling overwhelmed by choosing a plan, there's plenty of free help available, including toll-free numbers at Healthcare.gov and navigators who will walk you through the process in person. Find one at Localhelp.Healthcare.gov.

Getting personal. How to talk about money with your family

The holidays are one of the few times of year multiple generations come together, making it a good time to talk about family finances.
WAVEBREAK MEDIA

Some financial advisers look to the holidays as a good time for families to bond in an unlikely way: by talking about money. The holiday spirit and together-time can make it easier for families to discuss important financial matters such as parents' wills, how family money is managed, retirement plans, charity and eldercare issues, advisers say.

"When you help different generations communicate and cooperate on topics that may keep them up at night, it bonds them as a family," says Doug Liptak, an Atlanta-based adviser.

Making money talk more fun

Family meetings should not be held over the holiday table after everyone has had a few drinks, but at another convenient time.

"That may mean in the living room the next afternoon, over dinner at a fun restaurant or at a ski lodge," says adviser Stewart Massey.

What to expect

The adviser can kick off a family meeting by asking, "What one thing would you like to accomplish as a family in 2015?" says Liptak. Then the adviser can take notes and continue to facilitate the discussion. Money talk doesn't have to be awkward, and a facilitator can keep things from getting heated.

3 Secrets to managing your time

Ever since I made my first million nearly 15 years ago, my life, and especially my work, has been insanely busy. But only recently have I gotten better at managing my time. Don't let your crazy schedule derail your productivity. Here are three secrets I've learned to manage my time better.

Secret No. 1: Wake up early and work out

Every day is a marathon for me, as I receive nearly 3,000 emails and have several meetings and conference calls, not to mention that I spend the majority of the day trading stocks and making video lessons. By waking up between 5 a.m. and 6 a.m., I'm able to get important tasks done before everyone else wakes up and starts bothering me. I've also learned that getting in a 30-minute workout in the early morning helps alleviate stress and allows me to work more efficiently over the course of my long days.

THINKSTOCK

So many of us in the finance world have enjoyed a record-breaking year, but we're all so grateful and thankful, too. I love when good things happen to good people!

It's sad that police officer Darren Wilson had to resign due to this whole controversy, but it's the right thing to do so we can heal.

GETTY IMAGES

Secret No. 2: Shun TV and video games

I know far too many people who spend enormous amounts of time trying to relax by watching TV and playing video games, so much so that it sucks up their time and efficiency. Don't plop yourself down on the couch with two handfuls of junk food and give in to the temptation. If you do want to watch TV, do something productive during the commercial breaks.

For exclusive commentary, visit Metro.us/blogs.

Secret No. 3: Prioritize tasks

We are most efficient early in the day, so that's when I prioritize my important and favorite projects. Despite the pull to reply to emails, text messages and social media within minutes of receiving them, most are not pressing so you can and should respond later. Focus on your most complex projects and things that you're most passionate about first, and only afterwards concern yourself with dealing with questions and commentary from others.

Is it cool for Melissa Rivers to use her dead mom's Twitter account?

I've got a social media etiquette quandary for you: What's the policy for making use of a loved one's Twitter account after he or she has passed away? What if that person is a hugely famous comedy pioneer? Fans of Joan Rivers got quite a shock over the holiday weekend when the comedienne starting tweeting again three months after she died. It turns out it was just her daughter, Melissa Rivers, taking over the account. "I finally figured out my mom's password," she tweeted.

Since then, Melissa has been posting mostly about trips to the theater with her son, Cooper, and the same tweets have been duplicating to her own account. But here's the thing: Joan's Twitter account has 2.22 million followers, while Melissa's has just 231,000. She does know you can change the display name on a Twitter account, right? And the photo? It won't even affect the follower count, if that's what she's worried about. And you don't have to make it look like Joan Rivers is tweeting from beyond the grave. This just feels a little on the icky side to me. But hey, we're in a brave new world here.

Cuba Gooding Jr. is a lover, not a fighter

Oscar-winning actor Cuba Gooding Jr. was just trying to have a nice night out at NYC's Tao nightclub recently, but some young punks nearly ruined all his fun. "Cuba was sitting at this table hitting on girls all night," a source tells the NY Daily News. "These four rich kids, who were maybe 21 or 22, started hitting on these girls at the promoter's table and [the girls] weren't having it." A fight soon broke out between said promoter and the young upstarts, but Gooding "just sat there doing nothing," according to the source. "Cuba barely reacted while girls were getting shoved around." And when security finally had the situation under control, "he got back to being all skeezy and hitting on girls."

Amanda Bynes' parents using Uber to track her

This maybe isn't exactly the kind of celebrity endorsement the folks behind Uber were thinking of when they started it, but hey, you take what you can get. Amanda Bynes' parents have reportedly started using the app as a compromise to let their troubled daughter do her own thing but still keep tabs on her. "Amanda's mom, Lynn, set up the Uber car service on her daughter's cell phone. Uber can take Amanda anywhere she needs to go and it's paid for out of Amanda's estate, since her mom has conservatorship," a source tells Radar Online. "This allow Amanda to have independence. But at the same time, her parents can track where she goes." Man, wait until they find out about Find My iPhone.

John Boyega handles the haters

The first face to pop up in the new "Star Wars" trailer was that of British actor John Boyega, apparently donning an Imperial Stormtrooper uniform. Granted, we know basically nothing about the plot of the new film or what his character is doing dressed like that, but some people already have a problem with it. Racist people, mostly. Well, Boyega is taking the high road, if cheekily. He posted a thank you for the massive outpouring of fan support, and at the end tossed in a pitch-perfect, "To whom it may concern… Get used to it."

Hope that's the droid he was looking for

Speaking of "Star Wars," think your response to the first teaser for "Star Wars: The Force Awakens" was pretty big? Well, time to raise your fanboy game, because this guy has everyone beat. Barely two days after the trailer hit the Internet, 22-year-old Arizona-based Instagram user Jordan Breckon went out and got the new ball droid featured in the clip tattooed on his leg. Now that's dedication. Hope the robo-character turns out to be important to the story.

Puppy sings along to 'Let It Go'

OK, so maybe this isn't newsy in the slightest, but come on, it's so adorable. Here's Oakley, an Australian shepherd puppy that responds to "Let It Go" from "Frozen" by perking up and howling. Of course, that's the same thing my dog does when ambulance and fire truck sirens go by, so I'm not sure how much of an endorsement of Idina Menzel's singing this is after all.

YOUTUBE, BRITTANY BOLL

Rock 'n' roll is the bottom line for The 1975 frontman Matt Healy

Interview. The indie band's lead singer on why playing the cliched rocker isn't an act.

"It's just f—ing go, go, go. I'm going to smoke a joint here to fill the cliche, but it's the only time I can close the door away from everybody else," says a weary-looking Matt Healy.

The lead singer's rock band, The 1975, has pretty much been on a world tour for the past two years, and it's not over yet. It's no surprise that the 25-year-old Londoner is distractedly pacing the trailer in the artists' area at Reading Festival.

"People don't really know this, but I'm a very ticky person," he explains through a smoke-soaked voice. Does he need the weed to relax? "I don't need it; I don't have that vice. I've always smoked a lot of weed and it's kind of part of my identity," he rebuts, before citing that all too frequently heard comparison to people who enjoy a glass of wine after work.

Healy's defensiveness over his habit stems from "the stigma with smoking weed, especially in the U.K.; it is imbued with the idea of being slightly juvenile," he says. His understandably slightly agitated rebuff continues between tokes: "I've got a big song ["Chocolate"] about it; I've been defined by it. If I were a junkie or a drug addict, and I was, like, strung out all the time, I wouldn't be able to do 300 gigs a year."

Healy, whose indie rock band reached No. 1 in the U.K. with their self-titled debut album in September 2013, is aware that he panders to what he describes as "this flamboyant kind of dandy. There is an element of parody to me, the parody of the rock star and that's kind of who I am, you know. I'm not trying to be anyone else. I'm obviously 25 and having fun."

The 1975 play a sold-out show at the Tower Theater on Wednesday at 8 p.m. / GETTY IMAGES

Quoted

"A lot has been documented about me but not really enough about how everything I do is in the pursuit of music. I know there are certain cliches that surround it, but my identity is really ingrained in music." Healy

He knows his wine-swigging antics on stage might earn him some criticism, but, as he protests, "People don't want me to go out and be bashful. I don't want to go out and be bashful. What is the f—ing point?"

As image-conscious as the singer appears, one wonders whether the self-styled dandyism doesn't divert attention from the music: "A lot has been documented about me, but not really enough about how everything I do is in the pursuit of music.

"I know there are certain cliches that surround it, but my identity is really ingrained in music," he says.

EDELSTEIN TAKES CENTER STAGE
GETTY IMAGES

Interview. Lisa Edelstein's new show features a woman figuring out her place in the world, a few years after most people do it.

Abby McCarthy brings new meaning to the phrase "having it all." The main character in Bravo's first scripted series, "Girlfriends' Guide to Divorce," is managing her personal and professional life so well, she's writing advice books about how to do it right. Of course, this makes it all the more difficult for her when, secretly, her perfect marriage is completely falling apart. By the end of the pilot episode, her thriving writing career has torpedoed. But Lisa Edelstein ("House"), who plays Abby, says this is all part of the process of finding out who she is as an adult.

How would you describe Abby?
Abby is a super bright, talented and funny writer who identifies with her public persona as an answer lady, knowing how to be the perfect mom, knowing how to be a great wife, knowing how to be a great lover. Her whole identity is wrapped around those ideas, and all of it sort of falls apart by the end of episode one. So she's really a woman in search of herself. And she's doing it at an age when one would expect to be more established, and instead she's starting again.

Did you find any parallels in your own life about what Abby goes through, being in the public eye?
Certainly, being any kind of celebrity, there's a lot of pitfalls. There's a lot of dangers. You can really confuse your public persona with who you are as a human being and your own value as a human being, and that's a very dangerous mindset to get in, when you only feel as good as people are perceiving you.

This is your first starring role. Are you feeling the responsibility of that?

WHY COMPROMISE?

"Girlfriends' Guide to Divorce" premieres tonight at 10 p.m. on Bravo. / SERGEI BACHLAKOV, BRAVO

I'm loving it. I love this project. I feel like it uses every part of me, as opposed to having to use a sliver of yourself to move forward somebody else's storyline. It's really a fun opportunity and I'm super grateful for it. I always have fun on my jobs, but this has been a remarkable experience.

It seems like Abby and her husband, Jake, aren't quite out of love with each other. Is there going to be a will they/won't they aspect to their relationship?

Yes. These are two people who have barely dealt with each other for so long that by having to get a divorce and deal with each other, they're remembering what they love about each other. So there's still a will they/won't they aspect to it going through Season 1.

You just got married this year. Did your friends give you a hard time about the timing of starring in a show with divorce in the title?

I started the show about divorce the day after I got married. No, they wouldn't give me trouble! Everyone's super excited. This last year has been one of the most incredible years of my entire life. I am with a man that I was willing and happy to marry, which has never happened to me before, and I got this job of a lifetime. I got my dream job.

Bill Campbell gets a mask and jet pack in the 1930s-set "The Rocketeer." / PROVIDED

'The Rocketeer'

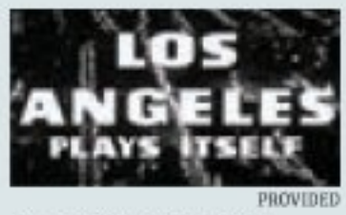
NETFLIX INSTANT

Streaming video was created to salvage an undeserved misfire such as 1991's "The Rocketeer" — a breathlessly hyped would-be blockbuster that deserved at least better than modest returns. Hailing from a brief period when Hollywood thought the world clamored for Depression-era entertainment (see also: "Dick Tracy" and "The Shadow," though Dave Stevens' comic was more an homage), it fits a good ol' country boy (Bill Campbell) with a Nazi-bred super-rocket, turning him into a budding masked superhero fighting the Axis powers on U.S. soil.

As far as origin stories go, "The Rocketeer" is slightly more than slight. In a fun turn, the main villain is an Errol Flynn-esque superstar (Timothy Dalton) who boasts German ties. Giddily directed by Joe Johnston (the first "Captain America"), it's an alternate-world franchise starter, one where '30s-set comics still rattle through the American imagination and where the capable Campbell and Dalton are mega-stars. But too late is never too late.

Netflix Instant

'Los Angeles Plays Itself'



PROVIDED

"The Rocketeer" makes fine use of Hollywood. Yet it, alas, goes unmentioned in this exhaustive, brilliant documentary epic from film professor and cine-essayist Thom Andersen that delves deeply into the city's use — and misuse — in the movies. Throughout its three hours, a city — both the real and the fictional one — comes thrillingly alive.

Netflix Instant

'Who Framed Roger Rabbit'

PROVIDED

One of the films cited in "Los Angeles Plays Itself" is also one of the great LA films: a case of corporate synergy that actually proved great for execs, filmmakers and viewers alike. Indeed, this, not 1990's "The Two Jakes," is the proper sequel to "Chinatown": a look at the city's nasty evolution via business. Just because it teems with toons doesn't make it any less savage.

Food can make any place feel like home

DVD. "The Hundred-Foot Journey" author Richard Morais talks eating as cultural relations.

There is a literal trip in "The Hundred-Foot Journey," with the clashing French and Indian restaurants separated by exactly 100 feet. In the modern world, most people are making that same journey, though often much farther, for school or jobs or marriage.

For author Richard Morais, the son of an American mother and Portuguese father who grew up in Switzerland, food is something that's become a way to feel at home anywhere.

"People always say, 'You've traveled around the world, where is home?' Well, honestly, I've gotten to the point that home is anywhere I am getting a meal and sharing it with family and friends," he says over dinner at White Street, the recently opened Tribeca restaurant of chef Floyd Cardoz, who created the dishes featured in the novel's film adaptation.

"That's as close to home as I'm ever gonna get, because most of us are nomads, we're a mishmash of cultures, and we're getting more and more mobile," he says.

Visit Metro.us for Floyd Cardoz's Beef Bourguignon a la Hassan recipe from the movie.

In the movie, available on DVD and On Demand today, young Indian chef Hassan Kadam (Manish Dayal) cooks his way into the esteem of Michelin-starred restaurant owner Madame Mallory (Helen Mirren), whose emotional journey is the title's metaphorical meaning. Cooking is Hassan's passion, but also a way to preserve and share his heritage after his family was driven out of India and made their new home in the south of France.

Cooking food with that kind of significance can be an emotional experience. "When you're homesick, the thing you crave most is food," Morais points out. A dish that makes him nostalgic is codfish, which recalls memories of his father's rare but cherished home-cooked meals.

"He's sort of macho, a Portuguese background, not very verbally demonstrative," Morais says. "But he adored his children, and how he would [show] it was through food."

Family gatherings

Food at the holiday table

Although a holiday gathering can be a great reason for people who may otherwise not see eye-to-eye to set aside their differences, Morais doesn't recommend pushing your luck with the food. "Often it's so stressful and people are so tired," he says. "I think the lower-key meals are the ones where the real magic happens." Another piece of advice: Leave fusion cuisine to the professionals. Morais still remembers a dish by chef Floyd Cardoz, a barbecue pulled pork-style lamb seasoned with Indian spices. "It was exquisite; it was the perfect fusion. Now, sometimes fusion doesn't work – it tastes like two warring plates – but when it works, it's sublime."

Changing the way we see Iran

Memoir. In "The Lonely War," Nazila Fathi uses her personal narrative to dispel cliches and stereotypes.

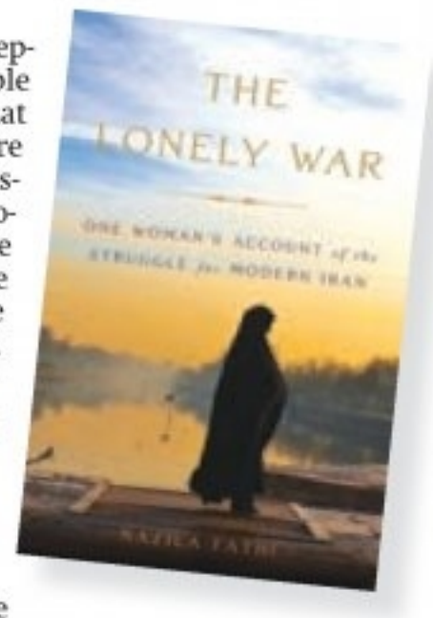
Serving as the Iranian correspondent for The New York Times — among other publications — has put Nazila Fathi's life in danger many times over the past decade, but she never questioned her choice to become a journalist.

"You become so overwhelmed by the events that somehow you don't feel the fear," she says. She adds that growing up in Iran during the Iranian Revolution made her accustomed to living in a fearful climate, and she didn't realize just how stressful her environment was until she left the country.

Fathi's new memoir, "The Lonely War" (out Dec. 9), chronicles the aftermath of the revolution and how it affected her personally. The way Fathi weaves Iran's narrative with her own makes for a compelling read. She tells us that one reason she wrote the book is to break down stereotypes people have about Iran.

Such stereotyping was evident even as she finalized the book's cover: "The publisher said people wouldn't know this was a book about Iran unless we put a woman wearing a chador on the cover," Fathi says. "Whenever someone wants to use an image to represent Iran, it's a picture of a woman in a chador. This is such a cliche, both for the regime and here in the West. ... You hardly ever come across a woman who lives here, in a free country, and wears the chador." In the end, Fathi took her publisher's advice and she's ultimately happy with the cover. "I hope that once people read the book they learn that these are not true perceptions of the country and its people."

NAZILA FATHI HAS BEEN AN IRANIAN CORRESPONDENT FOR OVER 20 YEARS.
HASSAN SARBAKHSHIAN



Another misconception Fathi says people in the West have is that nuclear weapons are the most important issue to the Iranian people. "They don't care about it. This is the most important issue in America's foreign policy and Israel's foreign policy, but for Iranians, it's a minor issue," she says.

Instead, she says, they care about gaining more personal freedoms. As the middle class has grown, Fathi says the people see freedoms that exist elsewhere and they want them, too.

When Iranian pop singer Morteza Pashaei died of cancer Nov. 14 at 30 years old, thousands of Iranians flooded the streets all across Iran to mourn for him. "Women, who are not permitted to sing in public, were singing his songs," Fathi says. "It's a sign that the younger generation is vying for more personal freedom. They're looking for an excuse to show their solidarity."

It's a fight the Iranian people are still fighting, and Fathi's voice is one of 77 million — albeit a strong one. Her story is worth hearing; she did risk her life to tell it.

Tours

Sightsee

The RCA Studio B tour provides an intimate and knowledge-packed experience that any music lover — not just country fans — can appreciate. Your tour guide will be an energetic wealth of stories, taking you through the years of the famous recording studio, which still operates today.

Hear tell of the time Dolly Parton refused to let Elvis cover "I Will Always Love You" because he would own half of the publishing rights. Listen to clips from the Everly Brothers and Waylon Jennings while getting a behind-the-scenes look at where they recorded — in fact, depending on when you go, you might get to see an artist recording.

If the studio is unoccupied, step inside and take a seat at the piano Elvis used.

The tour leaves from the Country Music Hall of Fame. Factor in time for a self-guided tour there before or after your Studio B stop. 222 Fifth Ave. 615-416-2001 www.studiob.org

Down south. Spend a long weekend in Music City, USA.

Nashville, Tennessee, is widely known as the city of music, and for good reason. Pinball down Broadway, the Southern town's touristy yet charming main drag, and you'll hear live music pouring out of every bar. But while we love a good ol' honky tonk, we can't help but be distracted by the food, culture and history that Nashville has to offer as well.

Going out

Options for live music and dancing abound on Broadway, but we're putting Robert's Western World at the top of our recommendation list. Grab a beer and find a good spot to plant yourself because it's about to get crowded. People come for the great atmosphere, aided by a mural of country stars, neon beer signs and for-sale cowboy boots — but the real draw is the bands. 416 Broadway, 615-244-955, www.robertswesternworld.com

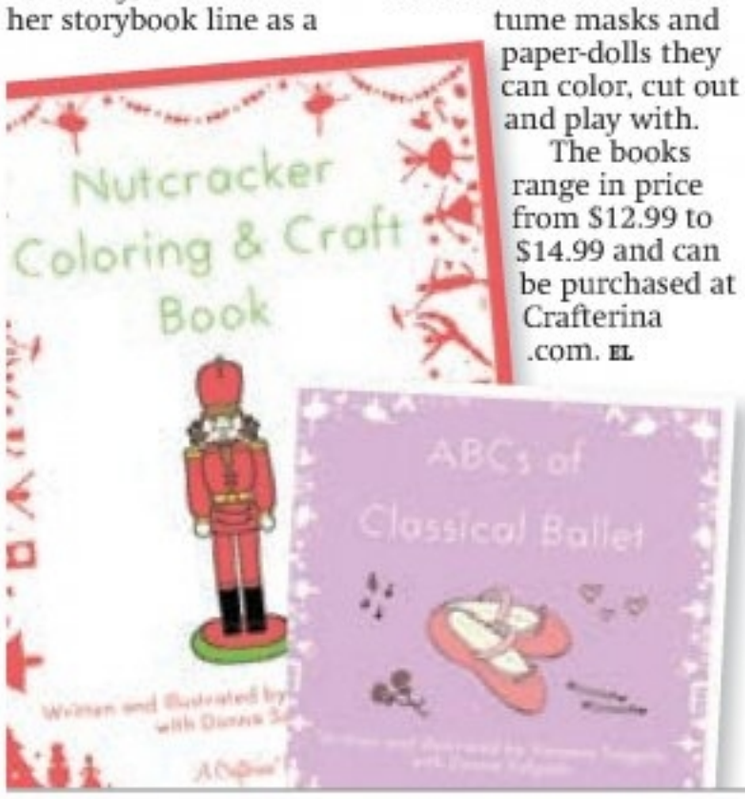
Books. 'Crafterina' helps kids celebrate the performing arts

Ballet is an obsession for many young girls, but the holidays are an especially magical time for dance. Ballerinas are gearing up for their big winter productions, and scoring tickets to "The Nutcracker" is on many holiday wish lists. If you're gift hunting for the tiny dancer in your life, consider the "Crafterina" series, written and illustrated by professional dancer Vanessa Salgado.

Salgado has long been teaching children's dance classes in New York City; she created her storybook line as a way to give her students a way to immerse themselves in dance at home without grand jete-ing all over the apartment. "ABCs of Classical Ballet" familiarizes kids with the dance world vocabulary and includes a few other key ballerina tips, such as how to make a ballerina bun and prepare ballerina slippers for class.

The "Nutcracker Coloring & Craft Book" has outlines of all the classic "Nutcracker" characters that kids can color in, as well as beautiful costume masks and paper-dolls they can color, cut out and play with.

The books range in price from $12.99 to $14.99 and can be purchased at Crafterina.com. EL



Exclusive interview with The Grinch

BILLY BECERRA

For kids. Dr. Seuss's grumpiest character breaks his silence to tell us why he hates Christmas.

For the first time ever, "How The Grinch Stole Christmas! The Musical," starring Tony Award-winning actor Shuler Hensley, will be performed at The Theater at Madison Square Garden in New York City. The Grinch may not be a people person, exactly, but he agreed to talk to us exclusively. Eavesdrop on our conversation below and see him take the stage Dec. 5 through Dec. 28.

What do you hate most about Christmas?
Probably the Macy's lines and Black Friday sales. I can't stand them. Anything to do with merchandise and lots of people in a small area, well, that's a problem.

Is there anything you like about the holidays?
I do like hanging out in Central Park under various bridges, and sometimes I go to the ice rink late at night when no one is there.

What do you want for Christmas?
I'd like a nice doormat because my dog Max keeps tracking in stuff from Whoville, and it's a giant mess. And maybe some security cameras so I can keep watch over my cave when I'm not there.

I read a rumor about you online that you and the mayor of Whoville don't get along. Is that true?
Pretty much anything dealing with Whoville, I disdain. They're just so freaking friendly, it makes my fur crawl.

I've heard you've met a Who named CindyLou.
CindyLou is the tiniest member of Whoville. She's very precocious. She has giant eyes and is just full of questions. I don't get why questions are necessary. They love to sing as well, which is another thing I don't care about. And they eat all these Whoville specialties, like roast beef and lots of sweets. My sweet taste buds are pretty much nonexistent. I like sour, hot and moldy.

Interesting. What are you eating for dinner tonight?
I have a giant bowl of warm mayonnaise sitting out, which I'm going to enjoy through a straw.

Is there a holiday message you want to pass on to residents outside of Whoville?
If there are any lovely people who enjoy merriment and good cheer, stay away.

Tony Award-winning actor Shuler Hensley plays The Grinch in The Theater at Madison Square Garden's production of "How The Grinch Stole Christmas! The Musical." / PROVIDED

Hobbies

So, what do you do all day? Are there any TV shows you like?
I love "Jerry Springer." Reality TV gives me the most enjoyment. I also like to play catch with my dog Max, mainly things like fetch the cactus, go fetch the bag of thumb tacks ... things where he isn't really expecting the consequences of the fetch game.

Better hiring regulations is the answer

The immigration crisis and the collapse of fisheries have similar causes: years and years of under-regulation and oversight. Bans on fishing, causing a crisis, could have been avoided if government had required moderate reductions over, say, the last 20 years. Maybe so many immigrants would not have entered unlawfully over the years if they were not able to get hired. But the government did not require strict enough methods for proving their legality for employment. If this were the case, the government could have been auditing businesses and prosecuting the owners of the businesses.

Re: 'Obama doing a good job' (Metro, Dec. 1) In 2007, the stock market was at its highest point ever. Unemployment was 5.4 percent, President Bush passed Medicare Part D with bipartisan support and he wanted immigration reform. (Ironically, a senator from Illinois opposed Bush taking executive action.) Additionally, the GDP was growing steadily since the recession he inherited and the 9/11 attacks. To letter writer Dennis Nascimento: Would you say President Bush did a great job?

76ers prospect receives hardware

The current Sixers may be the worst team in the NBA right now, but the future Sixers will surely be better. First-round draft pick Dario Saric was named the youngest Euroleague player of the month for November. He averaged 15.5 points and 7.8 rebounds.

Temple seniors reflect, still hope for bowl berth

NCAA. The Owl seniors have been through a lot in their careers, which will likely come to a close this week.

Fitzpatrick hopes he and his fellow seniors helped jump-start the Owls into a real football competitor. / GETTY IMAGES

The journey through football is almost over for Anthony Robey, Jalen Fitzpatrick and six other Temple seniors, who lost their final home game on Saturday to Cincinnati, 14-6, at a near-empty Linc.

Their journey through life is soon to begin. They've seen a lot and accomplished much during their time in cherry and white, which will more than likely end Saturday in New Orleans vs. Tulane, unless the 5-6 Owls can win and get a bowl invite the following day.

"I remember we were 8-4 [in 2010] and never made it to a bowl game," said Robey, a fifth-year senior who is working on his masters in criminal justice. "Who knows what's gonna happen? But we're still going to go out there next week and play hard and shoot for our sixth win."

Robey began his Temple career under Al Golden, then saw Steve Addazio come in for two years, followed by Matt Rhule., who hopes to finish with a .500 record in his second year.

"It would be great getting to a bowl game," wide receiver Fitzpatrick said. "Not just for the seniors, but for the whole team to experience it, so they know what to do for next year and going forward."

When they look back, though, both Robey and Fitzpatrick can't believe how quickly it's gone.

"I didn't know what to expect," Fitzpatrick said. "I wasn't really recruited very hard, so I was just thankful to be in college. It's gone pretty fast, but it will end well if we win a bowl game."

Quoted

"It's crazy, looking back on everything, and just how fast it went. I just wish we could have won [Saturday]." Anthony Robey

While the seniors won't be around to see the end result, their efforts haven't gone unnoticed in the lens of building a program.

"Some of these guys started as walk-ons," Rhule said of his eight seniors. "Some started with Al Golden, some with Steve Addazio. But they have one thing in common: They survived. They lasted, and just did everything right."

THANKSGIVING MASSACRE WILL LIVE ON FOREVER

The voice of Philly sports

ANGELO CATALDI
SPORTS@METRO.US

Visit Metro.us to read about what else is on Cataldi's mind.

There may never be a more sublime Thanksgiving Day than the one Eagles fans experienced last week. Not only did our favorite football team carve up the Dallas Cowboys like a 25-pound Butterball, they did it in front of 100,000 bumpkins stoked for a holiday celebration.

The best part about last Thursday was what Eagles fans did not have to endure. The surgically altered face of Cowboys owner Jerry Jones was conspicuously absent on the sideline. Dez Bryant never got to dance in the end zone; he was too busy berating his teammates. Even Fox analyst Troy Aikman had to stifle the nauseating testimonials for his old team.

Because we are Eagles fans, our first impulse is to embrace our biggest dreams again. After all, there should be no further questions about which team is going to win the NFC East, nor about Chip Kelly making the playoffs for the second time in his two seasons here. With a coach who has won 19 of his first 28 games, anything is possible.

The Eagles control their own fate in the NFC East. / GETTY IMAGES

Cataldi's final thought

"Philadelphia has a basketball team with no wins, a hockey team with no chance and a baseball team with no clue, but we have something truly worthy of our gratitude."

But the Thanksgiving massacre should be appreciated simply for just how special it was, regardless of future implications. It was one of the most exhilarating victories in recent memory — even more so than the other recent Cowboy drubbings.

When the Birds crushed Dallas three years ago to win the division — Andy Reid's last meaningful triumph — the Cowboys were pretenders, as they were last season when the Eagles secured the division title on the final Sunday against a home underdog playing without Tony Romo.

What made Thursday's national embarrassment for the Cowboys especially sweet was that Dallas is supposed to be resurgent now, with the best offensive line in football, the best running back, the best wide receiver and a much-improved defense. Aikman said early in the game — very early — that this is the best Cowboys team in many years.

And still the Eagles, without their starting quarterback (Nick Foles) and their defensive leader (DeMeco Ryans), demolished them. It was a game that will stand alone in memory, like the infamous body-bag event in Washington 24 years ago, and the only other Eagles visit to Dallas on Thanksgiving Day, in 1989.

If everything goes according to plan, Chip Kelly will have far bigger victories than the one he masterminded last week in Dallas, but this is one that will always have extra meaning because of the effect the loss had on our most bitter rival.

Has there ever been a more delicious treat for Eagles fans to savor, in one wonderful afternoon, than the bitter reactions of Bryant and Jason Witten as they tasted the most disappointing defeat of their season?

Thank you, Chip Kelly and the 2014 Eagles, for a day we will never forget.
